Reveal the Adriatic

The Adriatic is the northernmost arm of the Mediterranean Sea. Croatia's coastline on the Adriatic Sea spans over 6,200 kilometers (3852.5 miles) including some 1,200 islands, islets, and reefs. In other words, Croatia claims approximately 75 percent of the Adriatic coastline!

More than 1.000 islands

The islands, which are long and narrow (the long axis lying parallel with the coast of the mainland), rise rather abruptly to elevations of a few hundred feet, with the exception of a few larger islands such as Brač (Vidova gora, 778 m) or the peninsula Pelješac (St. Ilija, 961 m). There are over a thousand islands in the Adriatic, only 66 of which are inhabited. That means you have a plenty of discovering to do.

The average summer temperature of the Adriatic Sea is between 22-26 degrees Celsius. Warm enough to swim for hours, yet cool enough for a refreshment on a hot summer day.

Crystal clear

Beachwise, the world imagines a perfect beach as a stretch of sand. But if you ever went swimming off a sandy beach, you know that every movement muddies up the water. The Adriatic Sea is crystal clear. The tamest beaches are made of round pebbles. The wildest one of rocks. But even at those, you can find polished plateaus for a towel or a deck chair.

The Adriatic Sea is made by the human measure. Even the largest towns, such as Split, have promenades. Made for strolling and idling.
